“Where Pen Meets Trowel, Crossroads of Discipline – Precipitating Causes and Latent Causal Conditions”

Abstract: Although history and archaeology can be and sometimes are complementary disciplines, their different evidence bases and developmental trajectories tend to push them apart, even make them suspicious of one another. If we focus briefly, however, on the incompleteness of each discipline's explanatory preferences and research habits, it may be possible to encourage the kind of disciplinary syncretism that has always seemed possible, but is all too often disappointingly beyond reach.
